'Beating the Bomb' is an award winning documentary produced and directed by Meera Patel and Wolfgang Matt. It is about the biggest weapons of mass destruction ever created, the people who use them and, more importantly, the people who oppose them. 'Beating the Bomb' charts the history of the British peace movement against the backdrop of the atomic age. The film frames nuclear weapons within the wider context of global justice, and the narrative follows the so called 'nuclear deterrent', starting at the dawn of the nuclear age in WWII to present day.
